HUNTER EXPRESSWAY COMMUNITY INFORMATION SESSION TO BE HELD AT WALLSEND

The Hunter Expressway team will hold a drop-in information session at Wallsend this month, as part of the project’s ongoing community consultation.

Minister for the Hunter, Michael Gallacher, said the session will provide the community with information about the Hunter Expressway project, including the six interchanges along the route.

“Major work is ongoing and the information session will detail the activities taking place along the length of the project,” Minister Gallacher said.

“Information, including maps, artist impressions and a computerised 3D model of the Hunter Expressway will be available to view.

“Community members are welcome to visit the information session at any time between 9.30am and 12.30pm on Tuesday 20 March at the Wallsend District Library in Bunn Street, Wallsend.

“The Hunter Expressway team will continue to have regular public information sessions in the Hunter.

“This is an important project and we want to ensure the community is kept informed along the way,” Minister Gallacher concluded.

The $1.7 billion project is jointly funded, with the Federal Government providing $1.5 billion and the NSW Government contributing up to $200 million.

The project involves building a 40 kilometre, four lane divided road linking the F3 Freeway near Seahampton and the New England Highway, west of Branxton.
