Community update for Manly Vale new and extended clearways

Roads and Maritime Services – November 2018

Traffic on Condamine Street

The NSW Government is delivering easier, faster and safer travel on Sydney’s roads.

In September, Roads and Maritime Services asked the community for feedback on proposed parking changes in Manly Vale for new and extended clearways on Condamine Street, Burnt Bridge Creek Deviation and Manly Road between Pittwater Road, Brookvale and Medusa Street, The Spit.

We also asked for feedback on providing up to 21 timed parking spaces through Manly Vale on King Street, Innes Street, Sunshine Street and Koorala Street to improve parking availability for business customers at the Manly Vale business area.

Project update

We received feedback from more than 90 community members, including motorists, stakeholders, businesses, residents and commuters, who provided their feedback on the proposed parking changes and new and extended clearways.

We have listened to the local community and will carry out further investigations, particularly around the removal of northbound parking on the state road through Manly Vale. Some other areas for investigation include access to properties, loading and unloading for businesses and parking in the local area.
What happens next?

We will continue to engage with the community during this investigation process, which is likely to take a number of months to ensure we carry out a comprehensive assessment. Key stakeholders, including Northern Beaches Council and Transport for NSW will be involved as part of these investigations.

We plan to provide an update to registered community members on the progress of the investigations in February next year. If you would like to be on the email distribution list for this project, please contact the clearways project team at clearways@rms.nsw.gov.au or 1300 706 232. If you provided feedback during the engagement period you have been included on the stakeholder list, so we can continue to keep you up to date about this proposal.

Community engagement

During our engagement the clearways project team met with businesses along the corridor; distributed information about the proposal to around 3,900 properties; held an information session at Stocklands Balgowlah where we spoke to members of the community and businesses about the proposal and received feedback. We also used social media to reach the wider community, including road users who commute along the corridor.

We are continuing our evaluation and investigations into the key issues raised. We will prepare and publish an engagement report which provides responses to the key issues raised along with the next steps.

Other work in your area

As part of the B-Line integrated program of service and infrastructure upgrades, Transport for NSW is delivering a new commuter car park on the corner of Condamine Street and Kenneth Road. This will provide about 150 additional parking spaces for commuters from the area. The new carpark is expected to reduce the demand for long term commuter parking on nearby local streets, and improve parking availability for business customers at the Manly Vale business area.

The carpark is nearing completion. When opened there will be traffic flow changes on the surrounding street network to support the operation of the carpark.
